

BLACKOUT TEST DRILL ON TONIGHT

Large Barn On Orland Farm Struck By Lightning

A heavy electrical storm and a very heavy rain swept the Orland and Tinley Park region shortly after noon last Sunday. During the height of the storm a bolt of lightning struck a large barn on the Ebeling farm in Orland township and the structure was a mass of flames in just a few moments. Neighboring farmers heard the crash of the lightning bolt and saw the fire. In a few minutes a good sized army of fire fighters was on hand. The Orland Park fire department was also summoned and responded with their fire truck.

The barn was beyond saving and burned to the ground. Farm machinery, a large amount of new hay and two pigs were destroyed by the fire. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

A shift in the wind enabled the fire fighters to save adjoining buildings and the farm home. Smoke from the burning building was visible for miles around and attracted the attention of many people on 159th street and Keane Avenue.

Tinley Bus Service Will Be Continued

Tinley Park's bus service under present arrangement has been assured at least another six months after expiration of present inter-loditory order, which will be due the forepart of September.

Extension has been granted by the Illinois Commerce Commission at a hearing last Tuesday, July 27 when representatives of the Tinley Park Civic Club and South Suburban Safeway Lines appeared before that body for a report hearing on the bus matter.

All parties concerned were satisfied that need for bus service for Tinley Park exists, which is evidenced by steady increase in patronage since beginning of the run early this year. The Ill. Commerce Commission therefore, saw fit to grant extension of the bus service until March of next year, when another report will have to be given and a new decision rendered.

Frankfort Man Seized As Alleged Moron In Chgo. Hts.

The following article appeared in the Chicago Heights Star Tuesday of this week:

An alleged sex moron who admitted molesting two Chicago Heights housewives, both of whom escaped by speedy foot work, was in custody of police Monday and awaiting arraignment on two charges of assault with intent to commit rape.

The prisoner is Stanley G. Bobzin, 20 years old, of Frankfort. Alertness on the part of Policemen Max Atkin and John W. Costabile resulted in his arrest late Saturday night on downtown Illinois street.

Atkin and Costabile were driving past the Rio Theatre when they noticed Bobzin on the sidewalk nearby. They stopped to question him because his description tallied with that given by the women victims several days earlier. When he failed to give satisfactory answers, he was taken to the police station.

Identified by Women
There he was placed in a lineup with several other men, all of whom were viewed by the two women. The later unhesitatingly singled out Bobzin as the assailant. A few minutes later he wrote out detailed confessions.

Both offenses occurred on the evening of July 10. In one instance Bobzin, according to his own confession, followed a woman along East End avenue and Seventeenth street to a spot near the Thomas hotel, where he accosted her with an indecent proposal. She ran away, but he continued to follow her along Illinois street and then south on Chicago road.

Finally he overtook and grasped her, but she resisted and broke away. He gave up the attempt because of traffic on Chicago road.

Second Attempt Fails
In the other case he singled out a woman who was accompanied by a young girl on East End avenue near Twenty-third street. Attempting the same tactics, he was foiled when the woman grabbed up the child, screamed and hurried away. Later he left town by hooking a ride on an E. J. & E. freight train.

Police said Bobzin admitted similar sex offenses both in Joliet and Frankfort. These incidents had not been investigated Monday, but it was indicated that additional charges will be filed if the local cases fail to produce convictions.

Bobzin was locked up in the city jail over the week-end and was to be taken to State's Attorney Courtney's office for further questioning before being arraigned on the two charges here. Police said his manner and record suggested he was mentally abnormal.

Sippel Store Property In Mokena Sold

An important real estate deal was closed the past week whereby the Sippel store property has passed into the hands of Irwin Howes, owner and operator of the Royal Blue Store in Mokena. The purchase price of the Sippel property has not been disclosed.

This property has been an old Mokena landmark. At one time it was a hardware store and other business enterprises were located in it. Finally the late Elmer Sippel and his mother the late Mrs. K. Sippel became owners of the property and remodeled it very extensively into a general store with living quarters up stairs. After the death of Mrs. Sippel her son continued to operate the store until his death over a year ago. The store business was discontinued and the stock disposed of and the former store has been occupied by the Mokena Red Cross chapter as its headquarters and sewing room.

Mr. Howes plans to remodel the property and make a real up to date general store. During his stay in Mokena Mr. Howes has been very successful with his Royal Blue Store and his business has been expanding so rapidly that his present quarters are too small. The purchase of the Sippel property will enable Mr. Howes to carry a much larger stock of groceries and meats. He expects to begin remodeling work soon and hopes to move into his newly acquired property sometime in September.

On August 3 the first meeting of the newly organized Junior Victory Army will take place in Hatch Hall, Mokena.

The Junior Victory Army is open to all youths between the ages of 10 and 20. There is no physical examination. Officers will be selected by standard mental tests.

In England this junior army has attained a membership superior to the Boy Scouts. These boys too in the dark and tense days after Dunkirk were ready and willing to fight for their fatherland against an attack of the invader. Vince aut morie!

At the present time the Victory Army is attaining a vast membership in the United States. Thro rigid military training, and the teaching of the Science of Military Tactics those youths who join will be available for quick promotion when and if they enter the Army of the United States.

Washington, D. C.

CORN 'SIT DOWN STRIKE'

High ranking officials of the agriculture department are frank in saying that farmers are impeding the war effort just as much as striking coal miners when they stage a sit-down strike on corn.

Feed corn is desperately needed by poultry farmers, dairy farmers, and corn processors. But corn is not moving to market because farmers are holding for a higher price.

The typical farmer in the corn belt today is looking at his bins full of corn and reasoning that he might as well hold it for a while, since he doesn't need the cribs yet, and since the price might go up.

Washington is partly to blame for this. The attacks on OPA, the firing of Chester Davis, and the congressional demands to set aside the price ceiling, all have created uncertainty. So the farmer sits tight, saying, "I'll just wait till they make up their minds."

But when thousands of farmers do the same thing, it creates a scarcity which throws the national economy out of gear just as much as the lack of coal production. The patriotic thing to do, say Washington officials, is to send your corn to market now, especially since the farmer is guaranteed the benefit of a price rise, if it comes.

Meantime, the corridors of the department of agriculture are seething. Pressure for a corn rise is terrific. This is Marvin Jones' first big battle.

WICKARD GOES SHOPPING

Secretary of Agriculture Claude Wickard went shopping with Mrs. Wickard the other day. He stood in the grocery store watching the shoppers, while Mrs. Wickard did the buying.

He noticed a crush in front of the meat counter, while the vegetables, including potatoes, were going begging.

"That's human nature for you," mused Wickard. "Only a few weeks ago, when potatoes were short for a few days, there was a great howl from the public, and potatoes were sold in the black market. Now there's plenty of potatoes—but everybody wants meat."

When Mrs. Wickard appeared from the crush, she announced with pride that she had some meat.

"How much did you pay for it?" asked Wickard.

"Nine points," replied Mrs. Wickard.

"No," said the secretary of agriculture. "I mean how much money—how much a pound?"

"Oh, I don't know," she said. "All I know is it cost nine points out of my red stamps."

Wickard shook his head. "That's the trouble with you women," he said. "You're not thinking about the cost of food, but only whether you can get it or not. How do you expect merchants to hold to the price ceilings, if you don't even know what you pay?"

Mrs. Wickard promised to do better next time.

Want to Move Fast.

The method used in invading Sicily was a compromise among land, air and naval elements, resulting in the "peculiar amphibious operations" Churchill talked about. But the air forces believe they can move even faster and more effectively in conquering other parts of Italy if they don't have to be tied down by classical warfare.

For instance, with bases in Sicily, army airmen think they can so pulverize the industrial plants of northern Italy that they can bomb that country out of the war without waiting for huge landing operations to come up and help them.

Then with air bases in northern Italy, they are within range of the hidden synthetic gasoline and rubber factories which Hitler has moved into Austria and Czechoslovakia. Thus, step by step, the air forces believe they can knock out the enemy without resorting to classical warfare.

Axis Planes Knocked Out.

Here is one significant thing army airmen point to. During the ten days just before we invaded Sicily the Nazis had been sending a lot of new planes into Sicily and southern Italy.

But after one day of fresh Axis air strength, which was heavily damaged by U. S. planes, there followed a day or two of weak resistance. In other words, Axis planes were knocked out and had to wait for reinforcements. These reinforcements kept coming up until about two days before the invasion, after which Axis air resistance was light.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Since the Washington Post exposed the use of diplomatic cars for driving to dinner, many a Washington diplomat has been going out on foot. Among five Washingtonians who were penalized for pleasure driving was John Quincy Adams.

One reason for the Nazi announcements that an Allied invasion will start on such-and-such a date is that if the invasion does not materialize, Hitler can boast that it was called off because of German strength.

Sicilian Invaders 'Pass the Ammunition'

Allied forces, in one of the greatest combined land, sea and air military operations of all time, swarmed over 100 miles of southeastern Sicilian coasts commencing the long-awaited European invasion. Men in sound-photo above are passing ammunition to attacking forces which rapidly pushed far inland. More than 2,000 Allied ships transported troops and helped pound the enemy. Despite the tremendous size of the attacking forces, most units were reported to have arrived at their objectives exactly on time.

Machine Recruits for the Army

Tanks, jeeps and other types of military motor conveyances are shown lined up as far as the eye can see in the war department's Richmond, Calif., tank depot. War equipment is assembled at the Ford Motor company's Richmond plant to which it is sent from eastern plants by rail for a final check before being sent into battle.

Chasing the Japs From the Sea

With Old Glory flying from her ice-coated conning tower, a U. S. submarine enters an Arctic port after a successful campaign against the enemy in the Pacific. The Jap flags on her side indicate that she sent three enemy warships and two merchantmen to the bottom.

General View in the Caribbean

Brett, Maj. Gen. William E. Shedd, Maj. Gen. E. F. Harding, Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Mehahey, Brig. Gen. Gordon H. Young and Brig. Gen. Ralph H. Wooten.

To the Rear

During the first five days of the invasion of Sicily, 1,200 prisoners were captured by Allied troops. This soundphoto shows a few of them being guided through mine fields to await embarkation from the battle zone.

To Aid U. S.

Henri Hoppenot, who has been appointed to succeed Admiral Georges Robert as high commissioner for the Antilles. This change was expected to put the facilities and resources of this area, including the island of Martinique, on the side of the Allies. Two French cruisers and six tankers which had been demobilized at Martinique may be refitted for Allied use.

Sets New Record

Gunder Hagg, Swedish runner, is shown as he broke the tape to set a new official record of 8 minutes and 53.9 seconds for the two mile event in the Los Angeles coliseum. He failed to beat his own unofficial time of 8 minutes and 47.8 seconds.

G'By Mom

With five of her seven sons already in the armed forces, Mrs. Joseph MacKay of Jamaica Plain, Mass., bids farewell to her sixth son, Robert, 18, as he leaves for army service.

GOD DELIVERS HIS PEOPLE

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 5:22, 23; 6:1-7; 12:51.
GOLDEN TEXT—Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.—Psalm 50:15.

Why doesn't God do something? People are quick to ask such a question in a time of crisis. Today they want to know why God permits the war to go on. In the day of our lesson Moses wanted to know why God did not deliver His people from Egypt. He and Aaron had been appointed of God to lead them out, but their first efforts only met with failure and increased persecution.

The complaint of Moses, and the response of God make an instructive story for our consideration and guidance. It will answer our questions.

I. Moses Said, "Thou Hast Not Delivered Thy People" (Exod. 5:22, 23).

When the efforts of Moses brought heavier burdens on the people they blamed him and Aaron for making their situation worse. This sorrow and shame made them doubt God's calling and commission. How quickly men are discouraged in their purpose to serve God.

The people were wrong in their attitude. They should have been patient. They ought not to have assumed that the loss of the first skirmish meant the loss of the whole campaign.

Are we not just like them? The new minister or the recently elected Sunday school superintendent makes a mistake and instead of helping him to pick up the pieces and start over, we decide that he just will not do, that we must have a change.

Even though the people were wrong, however, the man of God should not have lost his faith and accused God of failure to keep His promise. He was supposed to have learned the lesson of patience in the long years on the backside of the desert. Had he forgotten the experience of the burning bush?

II. God Said, "I Am Jehovah, Thou Shalt See What I Will Do" (Exod. 6:1-7).

In other words, Moses was to remember that he was dealing with the Eternal One, unchangeable, and always true to His word and able to make His will come to pass.

So often men in dealing with God think of Him in terms of their own weakness and failure. What we need is to have a Godlike conception of God, not a manlike idea of Him. God is the infinite and Eternal One with whom we have no right to quarrel, and whose dealings with us are too high for us to judge (Ps. 139:1-6).

God's covenant with His people was established (v. 4). He had heard their cry (v. 5) and His deliverance was sure (v. 6). The only thing Moses had to do was to wait and see God work.

That word "wait" is a little one. It seems to call for no effort, to be easy of fulfillment; yet it seems to be the hardest thing for a human being to do. Men who carry the burden of active warfare with ease and with honor become discouraged and sick when they must sit in a prisoner's concentration camp and wait for deliverance.

Christians who can speak and work for God when things are active and moving become querulous and despondent when they have to wait for something to happen, or when they are laid aside for a time.

His promise is sure. That is not just a religious sentiment. It is a fact, and it is proved by history. Note that in the case of Moses—

III. History Said, "It Came to Pass the Selfsame Day" (Exod. 12:51).

Moses had to take God's word, for "the selfsame day," which we read here came later. It came in God's own time, after He had, through Moses, humiliated and broken the hard will of Pharaoh. Then He gave His people the great memorial feast of the Passover, teaching them the needed lesson that redemption is by the shedding of blood.

In that night Jehovah did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. That deliverance was as certain the day He made the first promise to Abraham (v. 3, and Gen. 12:1-3) hundreds of years before, as it was now that it had been accomplished.

History is really God's story, revealing His outworking of His plan for mankind. The torn and blotted pages are man's handiwork. Sin and unbelief have caused him to hinder the work of God, but God is not defeated, and in the midst of man's self-created chaos, He proceeds quietly to work out His own purpose.

The many prophecies of Scripture which have been fulfilled not only prove its divine inspiration, but demonstrate its dependability. Every promise of God is "yea and amen" in Christ (II Cor. 1:20, 21). We can count on that!

Well, Aint It?

An oral geography test was in progress. "Johnny," asked the teacher, "what is a bay?"
"A bay," answered farmer Johnny promptly, "is a brown horse."

A Knockout

Husband (endeavoring to clinch his argument)—Well, seeing is believing!
Wife—Inaccurate as usual—I see you every day!

Have a Care

Of all the sad surprises
There is nothing to compare
With treading in the darkness
On a step that isn't there.

"Imagine my embarrassment," said Dumb Dora, "when, according to my usual custom, I looked under the bed before retiring. I had forgotten that I was in an upper berth."

Condensed Milk Cow?

"It says here that a doctor found a collar button in a cow's stomach."

"That's a lot of ballyhoo—how could a cow get under a bedroom dresser?"

MY FRIEND FLICKA

by MARY O'HARA

THE STORY SO FAR: Ten-year-old Ken McLaughlin, given an opportunity to choose any yearling colt on his family's Wyoming ranch, picks the filly of a "loco" mare named Rocket. His choice merely adds to his father's anger, which is already aroused by the fact that Ken has failed his school work and has shown no sense of responsibility. It was Ken's mother who finally persuaded Captain McLaughlin that having the colt might be good for Ken, and the change in him has proved she was right. But Flicka is badly hurt trying to jump the corral fence. Even Gus, the foreman, says she is loco like her mother. But Ken refuses to be convinced.

Now continue with the story.

CHAPTER XI

Nell found her gardening gloves and her trowel and shears and went about clearing the broken flowers and leaves out of the boxes.

When she had done what she could to put the boxes and flower borders in order, she went to the kitchen, built up the fire and began to mix the cookies.

Now the oven was ready, and when she had nearly finished mixing the dough, Ken came into the kitchen. He leaned against the table, his elbows propped, his chin in his hand. A little red bandana was tied around his neck. His soft brown hair was in wild disorder.

"If Flicka's really loco, Mother—" His appearance shocked Nell. The look in his eyes was direct, almost staring—nothing like Ken. He was looking at her now, to drag facts from her.

"Well, Kenzie?" "If she's loco?" "It's a bad lookout for her, then, isn't it?"

There was a long silence. He struggled.

Nell looked at him, rolling the dough thinner and thinner. In his eyes she saw a question. He was asking if it wouldn't come true, if he wanted it hard enough; and his face was strained in anguish.

Right now, she thought, narrowing her eyes against the tears that came so quickly, stinging them, right now—to let him know, once for all, that wanting and wishing can't buck a fact.

"Perhaps she isn't loco, dear, we don't know yet for sure. But if she is, Ken," her words came slowly, "wanting won't change it."

She went on rolling out the dough, cutting the cookies, putting them on tin sheets in the hot oven. But she had really gone away with Ken, up the Hill, into the woods, face down on the pine needles, hands clawing at the ground, salt tears burning—

The insistent clanging of the supper bell roused him, and he sat up, startled. How could it ever be supper time already?

He turned in the opposite direction and looked to Flicka's place near the three pine trees in the Calf Pasture. She was lying down, not very far from where he had put the tub of water and the feed box.

He ran down the Hill, across the green and into the kitchen and washed his face and hands and slicked his hair.

All his agony was back. Flicka—why, she might be dead out there—lying dead instead of just asleep.

After supper he hurried out to see her. She was standing up again, and this time barely moved away at all at his approach. He sat down before her on the grass, clasped his arms around his knees, and made his vows to her.

"I didn't mean it, Flicka . . . you're the one I want . . . I won't leave you again . . . never, Flicka. I don't want those other colts. They're nothing, just simply nothing at all. And you're my responsibility. That's what Dad said. I pulled you in from the range where you were free and wild and could take care of yourself, and I've made you so you can't; so you're my responsibility to take care of."

Flicka stood looking at him. Her large eyes were dull and not fully opened. All her hair was very untidy. Her legs were not quite straight under her, but a little splayed out. But her ears were forward, she seemed to be listening, to be paying attention, and she was not frightened.

Nell, with a dark blue silk kimono belted around her slender waist, was brushing her hair for the night. It lay loose over her shoulders in a soft, wavy, tan mass; and as she brushed, she walked around the room, putting clothes away in the closet, opening the bed, bringing out Rob's pajamas, and talked to him about Ken.

"I wish you'd be nicer to him, Rob."

"Why? He's gone against everything I told him to do."

"I think he's suffering deeply."

"Suffering! So am I. And what's it all for?"

Rob, seated in the low arm chair, reached out a booted foot and dragged the boot-jack close. He planted one foot upon it, and set the other heel in the notch, continuing, "If he was going to have a horse to break and train as Howard did Highbow, it would have taught him something, made a man of him. But what can he do with this poor little filly? Not a damned thing. He'll sit in that pasture and watch her all summer, and neglect his work."

Howard has been walking his colts for him for two days." He pulled hard against the jack, and drew one foot out of the long worn, brown boot.

"But Rob, you don't see! It's already done—much of it. Ken is changed already. He's learning, even though he can't train her."

"Learning what? Learning to sit on his fanny under a pine tree?"

Rob leaned back in his chair, and out of his dark face, his vivid, burning blue eyes looked at her without softening. "Learning that it pays to be bull-headed?"

"No! He's learning to face facts. And that's the whole thing, isn't it?"

"Face facts! I don't see any sign of it," he said harshly. "And the kid looks like heck. If this goes on all summer he'll be in fine shape to go back to school in September."

Nell felt rebuffed and got up and went about in silence.

Rob stood up, picked up his boots, kicked the boot-jack back into the corner, went over to Nell, and with the boots hanging in one hand, put the other arm around her.

"Do you think she's — loco?"

"Love me?" he asked.

"I knew you were going to say that!" she exclaimed angrily. "When you've just made me mad, that isn't any time to say things like that."

His one arm squeezed and shook her a little. "Love me?" he repeated.

"I don't feel the least it loving."

"Love me?"

The one deep dimple in Nell's right cheek appeared in spite of herself, and she turned her face away.

"Oh, yes, then, have it your own way!"

She made her voice insulting, but it was an irritating habit of Rob's to be satisfied with outward obedience, as if, once that was granted, by his own persistence and violence, he could drive people the rest of the way.

"That's all right then," he said; and with his hard bullet head, pressed her face around until he could kiss her mouth.

"But Rob—Ken—"

"Don't talk about him," he roared, dropping his arm. "I've had all I can stand of him." He went out the room, slammed the door, and stamped down the hall to the bathroom.

Nell climbed into bed, turned up the kerosene lamp that stood on the bedside table, took her book from beside it, and began to read. Her dimple had disappeared and her lips were very set and prim.

Next day Rob planned to drive to Sargent's ranch to make final arrangements about shipping the four polo ponies. Nell was to go with him, and they would be away all day.

When, at breakfast, Howard and Ken heard about it, Ken said, "Would you have time, Dad, to come out before you go and look at Flicka and see how you think she is? She looks better, and she's eating some oats."

"No, I wouldn't," roared McLaughlin. "I don't want to see her or to think about her."

There was a heavy silence. Everyone ate rapidly, eyes down. Presently McLaughlin's gaze swung over again toward his younger son and noted the circles under the child's eyes.

"Did you go swimming with Howard yesterday?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Why not?"

"I didn't want to leave Flicka."

"Now I've had enough of this! Howard does your work, and you're all set to spend the summer under the pine trees watching Flicka. Do you suppose that's good for you?"

What sort of shape will you be in when it's time to go back to school? This is the hottest weather we'll have all summer. Your swim is good for you. You take a dip with Howard today, and do your own work too."

"Yes, sir."

Presently Howard said, "Remember what you said, Dad? That Flicka would stay alone and not go near the other horses? You were right. She stays alone in the corner by the fence, or under the pines. Why does she? I thought horses liked company."

McLaughlin made no reply, and Ken came bravely out with the answer, "Because she's a Lone Wolf."

McLaughlin turned to Ken, surprised, and the boy looked back at his father. Rarely had he been able to face those hard eyes for so long a minute. He did it now for Flicka. If she was a Lone Wolf, then he was a Lone Wolf too. He had to fight her battles. He was with her, the same as her—and it gave him courage.

Matching his stare with Ken's, Rob said to himself, "Well, I'll be darned. The little son-of-a-gun. Nell was right—facing facts—he's taking it on the chin."

McLaughlin turned his head away and asked for another piece of toast. Nell jumped up and turned the piece of homemade bread which was lying on the edge of the coal stove. It was toasted a delicate brown. She brought it, hot and crusty, on the tin turner, and slid it on to the edge of Rob's plate.

Rob was thoughtful as he took a slab of the fresh unsalted butter and spread it on his toast.

"Ken," he said presently, "that isn't what I meant when I said Flicka would keep to herself. It's because she's sick. A wounded or sick animal always stays alone."

Ken's dark blue eyes, confiding and full of hope, clung to his father's face, and McLaughlin felt an emotion within his breast.

"Oh," said the boy. He would have liked to ask if Flicka was not a Lone Wolf after all, but it seemed wiser not to press his father's sudden kindness.

After a moment McLaughlin said, "Has she salt, Ken?"

Ken's face showed such consternation that it was comical. Both Rob and Nell turned away their heads. "No," said Ken, guiltily, staring at his father.

"I've got a piece of iodized salt up in the stable," said McLaughlin frowning.

"I won't be ready to leave right away, Rob," put in Nell. "If you want to go out to Flicka—I've a few things to do—"

"All right, Ken," said his father. "I'll bring the salt out to her, and give her the once-over."

Joy colored Ken's face and Nell emitted a faint breath of relief.

Ken rushed out to Flicka. He had already seen her that morning. Soon after sunrise he had presented himself, and standing before her, said, "I am Ken. Do you know me? Are you getting to like me?"

Now he ran out to her again and said, "Dad's coming to look at you, Flicka. Now you be a good girl and don't run away."

As if she had understood him, Flicka stood quietly at a little distance when McLaughlin came out and set the chunk of iodized salt down near the pine tree. Then he took out his pipe and lit it, and examined the filly, while Ken watched his father to read the verdict on his face.

Finally McLaughlin said, "She's so sick and hang-dog—it's hard to tell about her now."

"Do you think she's—loco?"

Rob growled, "I would have sworn it, by the way she's behaved ever since she was born, but as a matter of fact, we've never seen her except when she was scared out of her wits."

"Dad—"

"Well?"

"When you said she'd been so frightened, always, when we'd seen her—did you mean that maybe she isn't loco?"

Before answering, Rob eyed the filly thoughtfully and drew several long puffs of smoke through his pipe. "She's got a very intelligent face," he said at last. "Much better than Rocket's. Fine, delicate mouth, lovely eyes set far apart, that light tracing of veins all over. But we can't really know until we see how she responds to training."

"How can I train her? What shall I begin on?"

"You can't do a thing with her now. All you can do is win her confidence. That's the most important thing anyway. There's one thing that will help you, Ken."

"What?"

"Her sickness and misery. When you take away everything, freedom, friends, home, habits, happiness, from a living creature, almost life itself, it will turn, in sheer need and desperation, to the one thing that is left. And that's you."

"Me," Ken had never felt so important.

"Yes. You are her whole world. Make her like it."

A Londoner in New York:

This is the voice of a friendly alien. I've been reporting this United Nations' war since September, 1939. But first thing I had to do when I sought permission to visit U. S. A. was fill out form for aliens. This peacetime form is all rules and a yard wide, full of highly personal, cryptic questions. It floored me. Only two questions I'm certain I answered correctly were could I read and was I masculine. They asked me also if I'd ever been insane. Even in the evil Nazi prewar days when I went often to Germany the formalities were never so tough, and I'd never been called an alien. It seemed a symbol of our life and time that you and we, so (as I believe) fundamentally alike in thought and aspiration, should build and maintain barriers to association and understanding.

Symbol of our times, too, I never saw Liberty as we steamed upriver. Liberty passed by as I was answering an FBI quiz. Very charming, very courteous those FBI men, but the going-over they gave me wasn't less thorough for being so friendly. Is it too much to hope that after the war the American and British peoples may share common citizenship in each other's countries? That would be a war aim. It might even prevent World War 3.

I was entirely unprepared for New York. Years spent in the jungles of Burma and on the vast deserts of Egypt, Libya and Tripolitania were poor training grounds for this exhilarating contact. A strange city—but the natives are friendly. Everything has been said of New York, but I was surprised at its smooth, velvety functioning, the politeness of the inhabitants; not surprised at its fascinating window displays, its high prices, its "nothing for nothing, and damn little for a dollar" attitude. London has nothing of New York's spirit or character. Paris had, a little; the same tempo, same fruity smell of gasoline, same gusts of warm air uprushing from the subways, chestnut trees. Nostalgia broke over me like a wave at sight of those chestnuts, recalling Paris Maytime in 1940.

Sydney has something of New York, in its waterfront, its irregular skyline, its hamburger heavens and gay, gaudy and swift taxicabs. New York's women and Sydney's have certain kinship, too. The skillful makeup, lithe figures, slim ankles and well-shod feet. (I am not disloyal to you, you gallant British women who fill our factories, clean our streets and man our guns.) On Fifth Avenue maidens in uniform are rarer than on London's Piccadilly. But those I saw rated a backward glance. Unlike British women's service uniforms, seemingly designed by repressed spinsters as revenge on their sex, US women's uniforms are chic, feminine, frequently fantastic. Perhaps occasionally unpeu trop fantastic, devised more for front-row chorines than for front-line corps. There's something to be said for ugly uniforms: those who volunteer to wear them must be pure patriots.

A New York girl asked me: "I suppose you must resent our remoteness from actual war, and seeing buildings unscarred, coming as you do from Britain and the African front-line?" But of course not! Because my home is shattered and my people killed should I wish the same fate for others? No Britisher does. As they stroll on Fifth Avenue I guess they feel like me, that it's good to be able still to find unscarred loveliness and beauty in peacetime proportions.

Unaided I spotted Jack Benny, Una Merkel, Billy Rose, and some lesser aristocrats. Walter Winchell was there, too, doing his homework. I was quite prepared to dislike Winchell. (It's the human thing to resent success in others.) I did not expect to meet a starry-eyed youth, but Winchell was much less sophisticated than I'd imagined. Maybe it's true what they say that every New York columnist yearns to be a farmer's boy.

Lunch-taking the other day I pleaded for postwar common citizenship for British and US peoples. Someone cracked: "Ah-hah! The British want America back." But what with the jungle heat, the miners' strike, the Roosevelt versus Congress issue, the food wrangle and the race riots, America was no gift just then. And in Britain right now we've troubles enough of our own.

Talking to an intelligent New Yorker about the United Nations' air assault on Germany these days I referred to the air Battle of Britain. He had never heard of it. I told him it was the Battle of America under another name . . . Except that chops and steaks are elusive, New York doesn't show signs of war privations. But war isn't merely deprivation without things, war is heart-break, personal loneliness, for those left behind. For frontline soldiers it is short periods of intense fear, long periods of intense boredom.

Colorful Set

THE prettiest little girl for miles around will be the one who wears this ensemble—darling bolero, jumper and panties.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1781-B designed for sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. Size 3 jacket with trimming for dress and panties takes 1½ yards 36-inch material, dress and panties 2¼ yards.

Teen Ager's Pet

THERE'S such flattery in the princess frock that it goes on and on as a favorite fashion of teen agers. Today's princess pattern presents a new wrinkle, too—lacing—emphasizing the smooth figure following seams at the waistline! Try this model at once if you are looking for a sweet pretty frock.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1732-B is designed for sizes 11, 13, 15, 17, 19. Corresponding bust measurements 29, 31, 33, 35, 37. Size 13 (31) dress, short sleeves, requires 3¼ yards 39-inch material.

String beans will be more tender if you cut them twice lengthwise before putting them on to cook.

To protect the ends of hemp rope and to prevent them from fraying, wrap well with light but strong twine and then dip the bound ends in shellac.

A leaky water bucket can be stopped-up by putting melted paraffin inside.

If you keep any poisons in the medicine cabinet, push two pins crosswise through the cork. Even in the dark they'll warn a person to "beware."

Most amateur gardeners water their gardens too often and not deeply enough. A good soaking when the ground has become practically dry is the rule for best results.

Less sugar will be needed if a pinch of salt is added to sour fruits during the cooking period.

Hooks, eyes, and snaps are most satisfactory when sewed on with the buttonhole stitch.

A battery of 16 drill presses operated by women. Electricity supplies the energy for the machines as well as for the efficient fluorescent lighting system.

Skimming low over the Atlantic, a U.S. Navy torpedo bomber cuts loose its devastating "tin fish." Here in Northern Illinois, Electric Power is helping to turn out these aircraft torpedoes in mass production.

A woman war worker with electric welder tacks reinforcing rings in the after-body of an aircraft torpedo.

A long row of aircraft torpedo after-bodies ready for the installation of gyroscopes which keep the torpedoes on a true course.

"Tin Fish Away"

The aircraft torpedo, or "tin fish" as the men in the Navy call it, is playing havoc with enemy warships, transports and tankers.

And the blows of these lethal torpedoes will become more and more frequent because Electric Power, the mighty force of mass production, is working day and night. Speeding every operation of manufacture—the cutting and drilling, the welding and fitting—Electric Power is helping to turn out these devastating torpedoes in vast quantities.

Electric Power is the silent, invisible energy behind the volume production of aircraft torpedoes and other implements for victory. It is the vital force that has made Northern Illinois a great war production center.

LETTERS FROM THE BOYS

The following is a letter received by Mrs. Hugh Tierney from her son Staff Sgt. Dave who is stationed somewhere in North Africa: Hello Gang!

I received your letter of June 24th yesterday, having received your letter of June 29th several days ago, also received your letters of June 24th and July 1st Rita. Thanks for the picture Rita its very good. As yet I haven't come across any souvenirs but as soon as I do you can expect one.

Believe I told you in a previous letter that July 14th was Bastille Day. A gala day here. Fortunately I was invited to a dinner along with two buddies by some French people who live across the street from us. The dinner was nothing short of a nine course affair. The main dish being roast rabbit which was delicious. I had a hard time drinking wine before every course. A custom here. However, I managed alright without sacrificing the delicious food. I really enjoyed the meal. Our baseball team continues to master most of our opponents. However, tomorrow night we play a highly touted medical outfit so we're looking forward to a stiff game. Running out of space so will close for now.

With love,
Dave

Dear Friends:

I'm in San Diego now and have been assigned as a replacement in a combat P. B. Y. squadron just back from two years in the Solomons. Ours is a low altitude night raider squadron known as the "Black Cats." Am acting as navigator and bombardier as well as getting in a little stick time (piloting) when my other work is well in hand. The latter never occurs, but I do stick time anyhow.

Our food is excellent and the quarters in B.O.A. are pretty nice. Don't know how long this will last, for we may ship out any day.

It's about time for a flight now, so I must return to this process of living until and for my next leave. Ensign Milton Borgess, V-P12 Fleet Air, West Coast, San Diego, Calif.

Dear Mom and Dad:

Hello, I'm fine and hope that you are too. Can't say much more cause I don't know much more. How's that for being honest?

Have you heard from Jerry yet? Wonder where he is. Might run across him sometime and I wouldn't want to miss him.

Guess that I should of stayed around Stanger's just a little and Mister Baudry too. Just to hear them talk. Nothing new, everything is just fine and going great. Went swimming in this salt water and am getting a better tan than I had last year. We even go fishing.

I heard from Jerry but the censor cut half his letter out. Pretty good, eh? So Dad's in 3A. Do you think that the army will take him? I haven't read anything about the drafting so long that it's all Greek to me. Bet that he hopes he can go. Guess that they still have room for the "good men" and a marksman too. Boy, I certainly wish he were a chief over me. Maybe I better not say too much, eh?

I hear that Carol is about the only one left in town. Bet he feels bad. But he's doing O. K. plus, right where he is. Say hello to all the kids for me and Morry and Frank too.

Tell Morry the carton of gum he gave me hasn't been opened yet. I'm waiting till its really a luxury.

Loads of love,
Russ (Bennett)

Mrs. Roy Schenk and daughter have moved to Chicago.

Frank Hirsch is enjoying a vacation from his insurance duties in Chicago.

FRANKFORT

It was announced by Mrs. Emil Lenhardt, secretary, that the annual reunion of the Hansen family will not be held this year due to the rationing of gasoline and food. The officers in charge deemed it inadvisable to hold the gathering which was set for August 15.

Eugene Bogdan was the guest of honor at a dinner party served to 18 young people who were invited to his home to celebrate his 16th birthday. A novel decoration consisted of sixteen lumps of sugar tied with ribbons and suspended from the chandelier. Table decorations were in green and white. Games provided entertainment for the group.

Dear Editor:

I have been receiving the News-Bulletin once in awhile but it comes through the district offices so I thought I'd drop you a line and enclose my address. It is really swell to receive a home paper in the service, especially in a place like this. There isn't any place to go down here. I have spent as high as three months in the camp without liberty. I think I am just about the only Coast Guardsman in or around your community and it is really a swell branch too. I am attached to the marines at present and I really do wish I could get back into a Coast Guard base again. We just don't get along. I am at present training on invasion barges which have proven very successful in this war. We are spoken of as dry land sailors or beach pounders, but the people don't really hear our part of the story.

I have been connected with transportation down here for the past five months and we have our gasoline troubles too. We are allotted five gallons a day in some of our trucks which use three times that much so the gasoline problem is plenty tough down here. The marines seem to have more trouble getting the fuel than the C. G. Our location is very good. We are five miles off of the ocean right on a bay. The weather is terrible hot. I believe it gets about 110 every day. The chow is very good and the entertainment is good. Free movies every night. Well I guess I will thank you again and keep them coming.

Yours truly,

Dear Ladies:

I received your box of goodies today. I really do appreciate it. It shows the folks back home still remember you.

I am in a nice part of the country. The camp is surrounded by wooded hills, about half of the trees are of the pine variety. The ground is very sandy. The days get pretty hot, but it always cools off at night and you need a blanket.

It is hard to believe I will finish my basic training in about two weeks. The time sure has gone fast so far. They keep you busy most of the day and you can find plenty to do on your time off. I like this Army life so far and have learned a whole lot already. I have been interviewed and recommended for the Army Specialized training program. I hope I will be lucky enough to be sent to school in Chicago. I don't have anything else to write so will close thanking you for your thoughtfulness.

I would be glad to find time to answer any letters sent me.
Pvt. Clifford C. Horn.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Millions of wild Hevea seeds from Brazil have been sent to neighboring countries and as far north as Central America in the extensive program under way to encourage rubber development in the Western Hemisphere. Congress appropriated $500,000 in 1940 to stimulate rubber planting in the Americas.

India rubber pontons and ponton boats were used by the U. S. government 100 years ago. They were made of coated canvas in three compartments, each inflated by a separate tube. They were inflated by a hand bellows and collapsed and sank with the slightest leak.

James Shaw

In war or peace
B.F. Goodrich
FIRST IN RUBBER

ERNEST JONES, that famous apostle of "Swing the Club Head," was standing on the practice tee at Maidstone, surrounded by sand dunes and ocean. Also by a brooding melancholy.

Jones has taught or instructed at one time or another more women stars than any three pros in the trade. In the list you will find such names as Virginia Van Wie, Elizabeth Hicks, Helen Hicks, and many others known to feminine golfing fame.

The able instructor was in a depressed mood as I came up. "It is so simple," he said, "so very simple, and they all make it so complex. Oh, so complex."

"Just what are you talking about?" I asked. "The food situation, gas, rubber or coal mining? Or the Brooklyn Dodgers?"

"I am talking about the game of golf," the instructor said. "There never was a simpler game that has been turned into so many contortions, where 98 per cent of the players are always in a bewildered and baffled state of mind. And all they have to do to play good golf is to swing the head of a club. Only that—and nothing else. And most of them do everything else except swing the club head."

"The main trouble with golf," the earnest Ernest continued, "is that about 95 per cent of its players have only a blurred picture left. They are trying to concentrate on foot action, body action, wrist action, pivoting and a dozen other things. Now even Bobby Jones says he has to concentrate on three things during the swing. I claim that no one can concentrate on more than one thing at a time, and I don't care how smart he is. If everyone would just concentrate on using the hands to swing the club head, nothing else would matter."

"Golfers are taught to start the swing with the left hip—by shoving off from the left foot—by starting a body turn—by getting the left side around—by locking the head and neck to keep from looking up—all this and very much more. This is quite impossible. Quite."

The Brittle Animal

It hasn't required the events of the last few weeks to name you the most brittle animal in the world. And I don't mean the rabbit or the human being. I mean the racing thoroughbred.

The average thoroughbred is game enough and fast enough. But he is also subject and heir to more ills, ailments, injuries, including the pip and housemaid's knee, than anything that lives.

In the last few days we have discovered that Count Fleet can't run in the $50,000 classic because of an injured hoof.

That Long Tail Whirlaway, the iron horse, is through.

That Shut Out can only run now and then and is strictly undependable.

That Alsab isn't ready to take a crack at $50,000 after a long rest.

That at least 40 per cent of the horses running at various tracks are either sore and crippled, or just on the verge of this unhappy state—as far as the mutual player is concerned.

And don't overlook the morbid fact that through the mutuels and bookmakers the non-combatants kick in with slightly more than a billion dollars a year.

I was talking with Earl Sande, the well-know trainer. "It is quite easy to explain," Sande said. "The average thoroughbred weighs from 1,000 to 1,100 pounds. He has a tremendous body set up on thin, slight legs and comparatively small underfooting. He usually gets away with a half-kangaroo jump, especially in sprints, and so this tremendous weight is thrown upon slender props."

"As you know the most thoroughbreds give all they have. They are usually dead game. They can't tell the trainer when they are ready or when they are not. It might surprise you to know how many start when they are sore or lame, and yet it is often impossible for any trainer to know this in advance. And I don't care how smart he might be."

"I never knew a trainer or a jockey," Sonny Workman said, "who could tell you two days in advance whether any certain horse would be ready to give his best."

The Odd Season

The racing season of 1943 has known greater crowds and has seen more money thrown along the line than any other in history, in spite of transportation handicaps and increased taxes.

Yet no other season has known as many overturns among the better horses.

In this brief campaign, starting in April, we've seen Count Fleet dominate the three-year-old field and then run into trouble with his big-stake ahead.

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE return of Patty Berg, brilliant Minneapolis professional, to the golfing wars was a pleasant event to the thousands of persons who watched her win the recent Women's Western Open golf tournament at Chicago.

As you know, the buxom Miss Berg was told by physicians after an automobile accident in Texas in December, 1941, that she would be lucky to walk again, let alone play golf. But the golfing galleries saw Patty trudging over the fairways with her knee still bound tightly. Although she limps slightly, she has good reason to be proud of the progress.

Her heartening comeback did not come without a great deal of effort. She explains it simply.

"A year ago I started practicing for half an hour a day until I got so I could pivot fairly well. Then I started playing a few holes at a time, finally working it up until I could go the full round only several months ago. But I never played more than 18 holes in one day until now. Going the 29 holes to win twice convinced me my comeback is a success.

Recovery Route

"Another thing that is a tremendous help is swimming. I go to an indoor pool every morning—when not in a tournament—and swim for about 30 minutes. Then I straighten my knee by pumping a bicycle. You'll find me out riding a bike every day now."

Then, too, she has altered her playing methods to some extent. Patty credits Les Bolstad of Minneapolis, one of the Northwest's best-known pros, with changing her swing and stance to ease the pressure on her injured knee.

About Bowling

Despite the many obvious handicaps confronting it, bowling recently wound up one of the most successful seasons in history and still retains top place as the most popular year-round participant sport.

A report released by the American Bowling Congress shows that there are 16,000,000 Americans now spilling pins. This total includes 13,500,000 men, 2,000,000 women and approximately 500,000 youngsters. Of these, 14,200,000 bowl against ten-pins—the big pins—and 1,800,000, principally along the eastern and southern seaboard, roll against duckpins and candlepins.

It may surprise you to learn that the busiest bowling proprietor in the country is your Uncle Sam, who manages 2,027 alleys at army, navy, marine and coast guard stations.

Figures also show that where bowling is made available to men in the armed forces it is one of the most popular on-post recreations, in the majority of cases supporting itself and providing additional funds for other recreational facilities.

Statistics aren't the most fascinating things in the world, but it may be fairly interesting to learn that the ABC estimates that 6,000,000 men and women between the ages of 40 and 50 are regular bowlers. Five million are found between the ages of 30 and 40, and so on down the age classifications.

The hold bowling has taken throughout the nation is a strong one. There are approximately 70,000 bowling alley beds in 10,000 establishments over the country. This is approximately a 300 per cent increase in the availability of bowling over 1935-36 figures.

From the standpoint of organized bowling, Detroit is the leading city, having one team for 112 persons. Illinois is the leading state with 27,661 teams.

You and the other 15,999,999 bowlers spend $221,000,000 on the game each year, organized bowlers paying $78,250,000 of this amount. The "capital structure of retail bowling establishments," according to the report, amounts to $770,000,000.

Team membership figures were not available, but the ABC estimated there was a reduction of about 15 per cent in that category.

Cows Should Be Fed On Basis of Milk Given

Feed Cannot Be Spared For Low Producers

Nobody knows yet how the crop yields of corn, wheat, barley, soybeans, cottonseed and linseed will compare with past averages, E. J. Perry of Rutgers U. points out. And feed dealers cannot get deliveries very far in advance or in so large amounts as formerly. This makes it especially important to waste no concentrates in feeding, but to feed every cow strictly according to her milk yield in order to meet 1943 goals.

If there's no time to mark down daily milk yields, Perry urges dairymen to do it every week or 10 days and readjust grain feeding accordingly.

On pasture, the rate of concentrate feeding will depend upon how good the pasture is. Early grass up to July usually has more digestible protein than the later, so much less grain is then required than in the winter months.

Pasture is the most natural feed for cows and with plenty of it they will "shine" at the pail, and be in condition to start a good job in the barn this coming fall. It is not uncommon for a cow only medium in size to eat 100 pounds of pasture daily. Neglect of pastures and of cows on pasture is one of the biggest problems facing the dairymen today.

For cows giving 35 to 40 pounds of milk a day, a feed ratio of one pound of grain a day for every seven pounds of milk is about right.

To help herd owners provide conditions favorable to high yields during the pasture season, Perry offers the following reminders:

Fertilize permanent pastures and provide special summer supplementary pastures according to the recommendations of the county agricultural agent. Practice rotation grazing from one plot to another.

Avoid too early and too close grazing. For regular pasture, four to six inches is a good height.

Adapt the kind and amount of grain to the kind and amount of pasture. Early pasture is high in digestible protein and the grain mixture used can have 3 or 4 per cent less protein than is usually needed for winter feeding.

For the higher testing breeds, a good trial starting rate for a cow which gives 30 pounds of milk a day is one pound of grain for five pounds of milk, and for the lower testing breeds, those giving 35 to 40 pounds a day, a good rate is one pound of grain for every seven pounds of milk, Perry says. Using and watching the scales carefully will tell the story and yield dividends for the owner and the country.

In hot weather, the herd will be better off in the barn during the latter half of the afternoon, especially if the barn is cool and the flies are partially controlled.

Prevent Farm Fires

Fifty per cent of our farm fires are preventable, states F. W. Niemeyer, general agent of the Farm Credit administration of St. Louis. Every farmer should take extra precautions to see that fires are not caused by defective flues, sparks on the roof, smoking, spontaneous combustion and improper handling of gasoline and kerosene.

For the duration it will be extremely difficult to obtain the lumber, hardware, roofing and labor to rebuild. The WLB has limited construction to that which, regardless of cost, (a) is essential to meet production goals, (b) is consistent with sound agricultural practices, (c) uses a minimum of scarce materials, and (d) does not interfere with labor essential to war industries.

Agricultural Notes

The "back to the farm movement" is gaining force right along.

If oats are grown as a companion crop in the seeding of legumes, a variety which matures early and produces a minimum amount of straw should be used. Kanota and Vicland are best suited for this purpose in addition to giving excellent grain yields.

Coffee Most Adulterated Of Foods Generation Ago

Up to a generation ago, coffee was subjected to more adulteration than almost any other article of food, says Collier's. Among the spurious substances used were the roasted and ground roots of the dandelion, carrot, parsnip and beet; grains of wheat and rice; seeds of lupine, the broom, fenugreek and iris; and chicory, acorns and soybeans.

There was even a molding machine that made "coffee beans" from a mixture of flour and molasses.

From an old French word "mes" derived from the Latin word "misus" meaning a course at a meal, comes the Army's name "mess" for its breakfast, dinner and supper. Favorite meal with the soldier is chicken dinner—his favorite cigarette, Camel. (Based on actual sales records from service men's own stores.) A carton of Camels, by the way, is a gift that's always welcome. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

Here's Timely Hint For the War Bride

IF YOU are furnishing a combination living and dining room with odds and ends from the family attic why not use paint and inexpensive fabrics to harmonize unrelated pieces?

Here a combination chest and dish cupboard has been made from an old dresser. The cupboard at the lower right sits on top of the dresser and a quarter round molding nailed to the dresser top holds plates in place. Both dresser and chairs are painted cream color and quaint Dutch designs in gay colors are stenciled on them. The chair seat covers repeat the colors in these designs. Pieces of the cracked mirror of the old dresser are cut to fit painted picture frames and typical Dutch tulip designs are stenciled on the glass.

NOTE: The painted and stenciled designs used by Early Dutch settlers in America are full of sentiment for us today. The Dove of Peace and Hearts and Flowers were favorites. Why Bother About Cat When Meat Is at Hand?

Mrs. Bronson was perturbed to find that the three pounds of meat she had bought had disappeared. Her husband, helping in the search, noticed what he took to be a guilty look on the family cat's face, and pointed to her and said, "There's your meat."

"Why, no," objected Mrs. Bronson, "that little thing couldn't get away with all that meat."

"Well, let's weigh her and see," suggested the husband.

They did so. The scales registered exactly three pounds.

"Yes," admitted Mrs. Bronson, "there's the meat all right, but where's the cat?"
